

"I'm A Soldier Give Me Your Bank Account Details"

Trading Standards have been informed of bogus emails in which someone is impersonating a soldier serving in Iraq. These emails are mostly aimed at small local businesses. The impersonators claim that they have an amount of money that they want to move out of the country. Insisting that this is oil money and is completely legal, they state that once the money gets to you you'll receive 30% and they will take their own 70% out. This is all part of their plan to attract your attention so that you are persuaded to hand over your bank account details to receive your share.

These bogus emails are a plot to get your money!

Bank details should not be given out through emails to anyone you don't truly know or who isn't trusted.

If you have anymore information or if you have received this email you can contact Consumer Direct on: 08454 04 05 06

Remember if it looks to good to be true, it properly is!
